Married Life's Troubles Warren Derides the "Fake" Amateur in the Amateur Night

Cabaret.

By Mabel Herbert Urner -HATS all this asked Warrestaurant, which was placarded with hig, black-lettered signs, Don't forget Thursday - Amateur

"Why, this is Thursday!" exclaimed Helen, "But do they have amateur nights at cabarets?"

"Why, this is Thursday! exclaimed Helen. "But do they have amateur nights at cabarets"

"Seem to have em here, and we've struck the night." Then turning to the head walter, who was standing back of their table, 'How about this amateur business? Any good?

"Yez, sir: you could hardly get a table here Thursday nights during the winter. But it's getting line now—everybody's going to the beaches," and he harried off to seat a party of four that had just entered.

"Ladius and gentlemen," suddenly announced a brisk young man, who had mounted the raised plaiform in front of the nichestra, "the first number of our amateur performance this evening is Miss Rose Martin. She is a—"

"Singer! Dancer!" called out several of the diners.

"She is some songstress," onded the announcer with a grin, as a young woman, in a rusty black skirt and cheap white shirtwalst, mounted the platform beside him.

In a high masal voice she began to shiril a popular song. With the second verse everybody was laughtng or whisting derisively and shuffling their feet. "Oh, why doesn't she stop," murmured Helen. "Can't you see they're making fun of her?"

"That's what she's here for. You don't think she's a real amateur, do you!" sniffed Warren. "She's some chesp vaudevillian trying to sing through her nose—faking the amateur game."

The Game.

The man who did the announcing stood back of the girl, with a broad grin and his hands over his ears. Every now and then he would stoop to pick up and put in a plate the small coins the diners threw on the red carpeted pistform. When the girl had enled her sons, amid loud whistles and shouls, he gave her the money and lowed her off mockingly.

"But surely she gets paid." asked Helen. "She wouldn't make such a spectacle of nerself for the few dimos on that plate."

Warren shrugged his shoulders. "You

Warren shrugged his shoulders. "You can't tell. These poor devils out of a job may be glad to sing for their supper."

"Our next number," announced the man from the platform, "will be Miss Emma Kelly. She is a-" pausing in the same way for the response he evidently expected from the diners.
"Singer: Dancer" again shouted the men at various tables.

"Singer: Dameer" again shouted the men at various tables. "She is a—a lady," he finished with the same mecking grin.
"Dear, how silly! Why does he announce them like that!" murmured Helen.

Miss Emma Kelly was a very unattractive looking "lady," with her old black satin gown, rusty shoes and untidy hair, and her voice, while not as nasal, was equally as bad as the first. She received the same share of hoots and feers and the same sprinkle of nickels and dimes.

"Oh, this is all faked up," muttered warren in disgust. "There won't be a real amateur here tonight."

"Why not? Why don't they have them?" insisted Helen. "They'd be much more interesting.

Cut and Dried.

"Guess they can't get 'em—or can't

Cut and Dried.

"Guess they can't get 'em—or can't get enough to depend on. This thing is all cut and dried."

Then came a girl who played on a harmonica, and who, like the singers, plainly faked the "amateur." After this the manager announced a recess of 16 minutes. The bored hooking musicals left their instruments and retired to a table back of the platform, where one of the waiters brought them some beer.

The intermission over, the musicians left their empty beer glasses and came back to their instruments. Again the manager mounted the stage.

back to their instruments. Again the manager mounted the stage. He announced a "Miss Tessie Williams" as "some song bird."

The diners were now in a more generous mood, for as "Miss Tessie" sangher black skirt was pelted with small coins. Suddenly a dollar bill fell at her feet, and she sang more justify than ever. She was younger than any of the others, and would have been pretty had it not been for the hideous black dress, which evidently all "amaisurs" most wear.

aleurs" most wear. Not Shy-But there was no shyness nor timidity in her manner to suggest that this was her first appearance, for when the second dellar bill fell before ner she left the platform and came down singing among the tables, staring boldly at the men and shrilling loudly.

"She'll want to come hers again next week, all right," laughed the manager, when he emptied the plate with the two dollar bills and the many small coins into her hands. The girl took it greedily and ran off.

into her hands. The girl took it greed-ily and ran off. Then a board was placed over the red carpeted platform, and "Mr. Wil-liam Murnhy," a "clog dancer," was "Oh, that poor old man!" exclaimed clem. "Surley he's not going to

For the man who now came up to shuffle about on the board was white-haired and shabby, and his clog daneing was most pathetic. The dinors were in no most for so aged an entertainer, and lielen saw only three dimes fall on the Ob, dear! Do throw him something!

I'm sure he doesn't belong to the others. It's too pathetic. Throw him a quarter."
Warren felt in his pocket "Hiere's the quarter—do your own throwing. I'm not going to encourage such im-

I'm not soing to encourage such imbecility.

Helen trinew the coin with such bad aim that it fell on the plane, and at first no one seemed to notice it. Her heart sank. He would not set it after all. But a waiter pointed it out to the plantst, and it was finally ledged in the plantst, and it was finally ledged in the plate at the old man's feet.

The party of sight, who were drinking freely of changaine and who had been tossing coins at all the other singers, had not thrown this poor old man a cent.

"The Gid Piker."

"Why should they! They came here to be entertained, declared Warren, 'not to have their feelings harrowed. This is no place for that old piker. And I'm not so sure that he's not a faxe with the rest of thom."

His dance finished, the old man now took the few celes and shuffled off the platform in a sort of shamefaced way that made Helen feel that at least his act was genuine.

Anise: A simple way to keep your skin smooth, soft and white is to apply ordinary mercolised wax before retiring, washing it off in the morning. This keeps the face free from the particles of lifeiess cuticle which constantly appear. The wax absorbs these wornout particles, so the younger, fresher, healthler skin is always in yiew. An ounce of mercolized wax may be had at small cost at any drugstore. Use like cold cream,—Advertisement. act was genuine.
